BEST PRACTICE IN MANAGING A PROFESSIONAL POLITICAL OPERATION

Presentation to ALN General Assembly: 27 November 2014
Professionalising Politics

• As political parties, we exist to realise our respective visions

• To realise our visions, we need to get into government

• To get into government, we need to win elections or be big enough to form or be part of coalition governments

• To win elections, form or be part of a coalition government, one needs to win VOTES!
Professionalising Politics

• Successful parties and campaigns have professional organisations set up along corporate lines focused on maximising votes

• The winning of votes (and electoral growth) is founded on a defined value proposition (brand), good strategy, comprehensive market research and the delivery of the right message in volume, over time to the electorate

• All elements need to be in place – only way to do this is to put in place an effective, professional political organization that focuses on vote winning as its core mandate
The DA Example

• In 2006, the party recognised it needed a professional operation that worked in tandem with and is accountable to the political structures of the party.

• Yet, the operation is separate and headed up by a Chief Executive who is accountable to the Federal Executive (Executive Committee) of the Party.

• Since re-engineering, the party has doubled in size, become a party of government and has positioned itself as a government-in-waiting.

• So what does a professional political organization need to do?
